An Essay on Method.

Divers simple or forgetful contemperaries are deceiving themselves with talk about the "rebuffs" given in New York and Ohio to the adviser in chief of the universe. They know not their superman, his methods and his history If suddenly he plunges into the thick est of a fight, if while tving his shoes of a morning he discovers and annonrees that something or other is the most momentous thing in the world and he will live and die for it: if he thunderously commands that such and such a law be passed in such and such a form; if his august paw affectionately pats some measure or candidate. what happens?

Though all his orders are defied: though his candidates and measures are beaten; though the projects of law vised by him are kicked into the dustheap or so changed that they are no more like the original than their illustrious patron is like Solon or WASHINGTON: though he skedaddles at the double quick from the shindy that he starts or butts into and a thousand bricks pursue him, what happens:

He blows his born madly and exult antly. Hosannas rise from all his worshippers. He claims and carries off a triumph

This is all right so long as the people don't notice the invariable method of that wizard, that conjurer of popularity. The pitcher that goes often to the well and so on. PHIL ROBINSON used to say that the African lion, the baughty Numidian lion, was an arrant coward and liminbug. This would not be startling if the ommission had not compared its measrements with those asserted to have been made by some rather mythical Englishmen in 1829, from which it deflices the statement that the tower now tips ten and a half inches more than did eighty years ago. It apparently outs aside the theory that the leaning was intentional and assumes that it was caused by the slipping of the original foundations, which the later architects strove to remedy ingeniously. It be-nothing is trivial, and while we need not been increased by the earthquake of lots provoked in the centuries of the 1821 and by the excavations made in Arian controversy, this transposition of 1829 to examine the foundations. The a comma has already caused the waste of only remedy suggested is to use the much valuable ink and has troubled many bells no longer, so as to avoid vibration, and to this measure the Archbishop of Pish has given his consent.

The weak point in the commission's argument is the uncertainty about its standard of comparison. Nothing seems are said to have taken the measurements ! Their plans appeared first in an Italian the measurements were supposed to are it never u have been made. It is perfectly possible, therefore, that the increased inclination of the leaning lower is purely imaginary. not at all stigmatic. While I am inclined to think that able impulses of the nature just suggeste were the source from which sprang this admiration of metropolitan ways and mar ners, like many other things originally gone many people become perverted. This per-verted opinion takes various forms. There and Mr. Bacon, are of interest. There is no is the big and rich form, which exhibits is provision of law, constitutional or statu- self in such questions as what city has the ory, that would forbid his accepting a title biggest or tallest building, or is the home of the richest man or set of men, or has the he did venture to accept; and I do not be- biggest number of inhabitants, or has the position that any penalty could be imposed this form of metropolitan admiration loss size or wealth and true worth: but ther a form of perverted admiration which shall be granted by the United States, and for folly and shallowness goes a step further It is exhibited in those people who set their hearts on acquiring the latest metropolitan slang and are eager to become adept in its use, are anxious to see the most recent and ephemeral theatrical production, stages with all the brilliancy as well as sensuous ness of many of those productions, and are literally ashained because they are not ac quainted with the words or air of the later popular song. Nor is this attitude unwar-States nor any State can grant a title of ranted by the actions of those toward whom it is directed, for there seems to be more pressly provides that with the consent of and more of the tipsel of life almost ever a person holding any office of profit or trust | phase of metropolitan activity with its con comitant adulation is not only detrimental to those who are its victims, but if continued is certain to destroy ultimately all me Sooner or later the best side of human nature prevails, and as the tendency to admire the larger cities for their up to date styles, slang and other superficialties increases, the disgust for the exaltation of best men becomes directed toward those of those who are cultured and talented of what is best in life, and the place of the greatest opportunity, the metropolis, is deserted for the place of those better things Why should these things be? Are there not enough men in the large cities to take their stand for that which is best and prevent the results of the admiration of super Probably not. Human beings collected together in a crowd and forming a community have as a whole little if any free will. They rush onward toward their destined end, and individuals can do but little to check them. As a race we are to a large extent toys of circumstance, o prosperity wealth and their natural accomfrom the moral responsibility of doing what
